NWU®

OPTENTIA

Master's Degree in Medical Sociology

The MA degree in Medical Sociology requires the student to complete course work ('Clinical Sociology' and 'Advance Theory of Sociology') and submit a mini-dissertation. The aim of this programme is to equip students with knowledge and understanding of advanced theories of sociology as well as to enable them to undertake advanced research on social phenomena and report it in a scientific manner.

Students should have the understanding that Sociology touches a person's entire life and hereby can supply everybody with guidelines to plan a new dynamic future. This will enable students to effectively analyse, address and make recommendations in relation to medical sociological issues such as the handling of social stress, dealing with health related training and policies, and addressing cultural aspects of health.